The Good Samaritan by O. Lawrence Hawthorne

Oh, what a sacred sentiment
Is man's humanity to man!
That life is gloriously spent
Whose constant thought and daily plan
Are governed by a love for men—
A love so generous, indeed,
That happiness comes only when
It serves to meet another's need.

The Good Samaritan, who tries
To minister to those in pain,
The name of friendship sanctifies,
And he will not have lived in vain.
No monument of crumbling stone
Such eminence can hope to give,
For in the hearts of men alone
Does honor through the ages live!

E. R. Lam, together with his family came to the Ravenswood district about ten years ago, being one of the first residents of that section following its subdivision in 1917. He was closely identified with all social and many fraternal organizations in Nevada, being a member of Yerington Chamber of Women of the World, I. O. O. F., Hope Lodge No. 22, F. & A. MRS. MARY L. RICE, PIONEER OF COUNTY, PASSES AWAY HERE

Mrs. Mary L. Rice, who passed away Wednesday evening at her Edgewood home after nearly 82 years of useful, helpful service, was the most prominent figure in Redwood's history today. Seventy of those years had been spent in this county and she was undoubtedly the best known woman in this city. Before her husband's demise, her home was known far and wide for its hospitality, its fine meals, its happy parties, or inspiring prayer meetings.

Mrs. Rice a charter member of the local Congregational church and every minister or guest of that church was made welcome and comfortable in her gracious home. She was a great home lover, proud of her splendid husband, the late George H. Rice, and her son, George S. Rice of this city. Her daughter, Miss Mary L. Rice, has been her companion and comfort of these declining years. Three sons were taken in infancy and she only strengthened her love of little children instead of embittering her as it might have. Her nephews and nieces were as near and dear to her as her own. She was generous to a fault, sharing all of the riches she enjoyed with many about her, and helping every good cause.

She enjoyed the Woman's Club very much, and was one of its most active members until her age and illness prevented her attending.

Mrs. Rice was a woman of great determination and character. She never faltered or wavered from what she thought to be right. She was both stern and tender. Her heart ached for all those who were in sorrow or trouble.

Of a family of five sisters and one brother, only one sister survives Mrs. Rice. She is Mrs. T. J. Shaw of Whites Salmon, Washington, who is well known here, where she has visited many times. Mrs. N. C. Cummings and Frank Wentworth of this city are niece and nephew, respectively, of the deceased, and she also leaves two grandsons, George and Elton Rice, of whom she was very fond.

Mrs. Mary Rice was born on December 9th, 1845 in Green county, Missouri, and crossed the plains as a child with her parents, Arthur and Permelia Teague. Her death breaks the link between the old Redwood and the new, for former residents in paying this city a visit always ask for Mrs. Rice, the oldest pioneer.

In the sixties Mrs. Rice married George H. Rice, founder of the abstract business in the county. The concern he organized in the seventies still bears his name and is managed by C. M. Doozee. Mrs. Rice came across the plains from Missouri in a covered wagon with her parents and six sisters and a brother, the latter was born during the long journey across the desert waste.

Mrs. Rice often told how her self and little sisters would get out and walk for miles behind the wagon in its slow movements. The experience was thrilling and when in her remotest moods, Mrs. Rice loved to tell incidents attending the long and perilous journey.

The family settled at Woodside. In an adjoining farm, now the Lane place, lived the gallant Geo. H. Rice, then a prominent millman of Woodside. The acquaintance of the neighbors ripened into love and soon Miss Teague and Mr. Rice were wed.

Mr. Rice met with an accident in his mill which resulted in the loss of his right arm. Soon after he removed to Redwood City, where he was elected county clerk and recorder. After filling the position for four years he engaged in the abstract business. He was during his life time one of the best known and best beloved citizens of the county.

Mrs. Rice had a fund of knowledge of pioneer times. She possessed a very retentive memory and was a stickler for names and dates, almost telling accurately occurrences of a half century ago.

Mrs. Rice was a resident of this county nearly all of her life. She came to this county in 1853, when what is now San Mateo county was a portion of San Francisco. She was the daughter of Judge Andrew Teague, one of the most prominent citizens in the formative period of the county in 1857. Judge Teague, the first judge of this county, was one of charter members of the Masonic lodge here.

Mrs. Rice took an active part in the religious life of the community even before the establishment of the church here. When the Congregational church was founded here in 1862, she was one of the original members and has been actively engaged in church work ever since. She was

The days of the Spanish-American war and the history immediately preceding that event were recalled to the members of the Redwood City Kiwanis Club Wednesday in an address by E. B. Hinman. Hinman, first president of the Redwood City Kiwanis club, is also the first president of the local camp of Spanish War Vets and is one of the most active members of the organization.

The chairman of the meeting was Carl Stoner of the Redwood Materials Co. An interesting feature of the meeting was a report by Rev. C. E. Kennedy who was a delegate from the local club to the district convention at Santa Barbara last week. Carl Wagner, manager of the Bank of Italy's branch here, was welcomed into the club by Roy W. Cloud.

FAMOUS MINING STRIKES

By THOMAS E. STEWARD

The Chino Copper Mines

EARLIER stories have told of two great copper districts within the United States, that which centers around Butte, Mont., and that in the upper peninsula of Michigan. Each in its heyday was the world's outstanding source of the famous red metal.

The third great American group of copper mines, though by no means the only other copper center in this country, is the Arizona-New Mexico group, and among its many mines, including the Miami, Inspiration and Green-Canaan, the one of the most picturesque history is the Chino.

"Chino" is the Spanish word for Chinaman. This famous old mine was in use in the days when Spain dominated the American Southwest, and copper from the diggings, a hundred or more years old, was carried on muleback to the City of Mexico.

Haggin and Hearst, two great names in the history of American mining, the latter being the father of William Randolph Hearst, added to their fortunes in the Chino mine district and it is said that Thomas F. Lawson, the speculator and sensational advertiser of stocks, drew from the Chino district the material for one of his most extravagant prose poems in praise of mining securities.

Near to the present-day mine may be seen the old adobe fort which was built to protect laborers in the early days from the frequent raids of Apache Indians, for it is known that the Apaches did not easily yield to the idea that the paleface was to dominate his section of the world.

Chino, with the Utah Copper company's property, holds the distinction of being a mine in which the ore is so accessible to the surface that more than 70 per cent of its deposits may be extracted with a steam shovel and without the sinking of underground shafts. In this it is comparable to the vast iron-ore district of northern Minnesota, which has attracted the attention of the world due to the ease and cheapness with which the steam shovels raise its great wealth of ore.

When work on a large scale was renewed at Chino toward the end of the first decade of this century it was estimated that more than 45,000,000 tons of ore were available in the property controlled by the company. This has been reduced considerably by fifteen years of mining that have included the prodigal period of the World war, but its resources still leave it one of the considerable copper mines on the North American continent.

What a Yankee Showed the Boers

DICK HART, an American prospector of the most picturesque type, told the Boer government of the South African Transvaal in 1886 that the part of its territory known as the Witwatersrand was the richest gold field in the world. This has since been proved perfectly true, as the world knows, but when Hart asked the government for $3,000 as a reward for his discovery, people only laughed at him.

Hart arrived in Pretoria from his gold field in March '86, with a small cart drawn by a pair of mules. On the cart he had the Stars and Stripes and the flag of the Transvaal. In it he had bag after bag of rock and sand, his gold ore. He stood in the street, asked people to look on, and panned the crushed rock and black sand in the plain sight of everyone. When he had finished washing, the particles of gold were plainly visible to anyone who would look, yet no one seemed to take him seriously. Hart said his gold strike covered a territory 30 miles long and 3 miles wide. Folks laughed.

This find was so laughable that it was presently to be a center of a mining industry producing probably as much gold as all the rest of the world put together. Records do not show what became of Hart, but a man who got an inkling from him of the location of the rich gold strike formed a company which became a $20,000,000 concern two and a half years later during the boom period of 1888-90. This company was based on the rental of a piece of ground for twenty years at an annual rental of only $500, with free rent for six months while he was conducting preliminary prospecting.

Whatever the cause of the Anglo-Boer war may have been, it was as a result of that war that the control of this territory, together with the rich South African diamond fields, passed under British control when the Transvaal and Orange River Free State were combined with Cape Colony in the Union of South Africa. And it is also true that the huge resources of treasure that poured from South Africa during subsequent years added tremendously to the reserves of wealth which enabled England to hold on successfully during the long years of the World war.

When it is considered that England, through the control of South Africa and Australia, held two of the richest gold districts in the world, and that the other richest districts were in the United States, it can be understood that in this particular type of treasure the allied countries held a marked advantage.

The city man went to the country to do a bit of hunting. A country acquaintance provided the dogs to accompany the hunter. The hunter sallied forth only to return in about an hour.

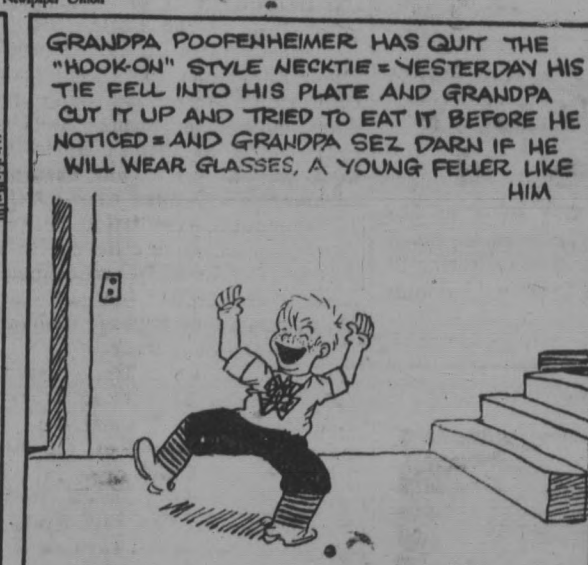

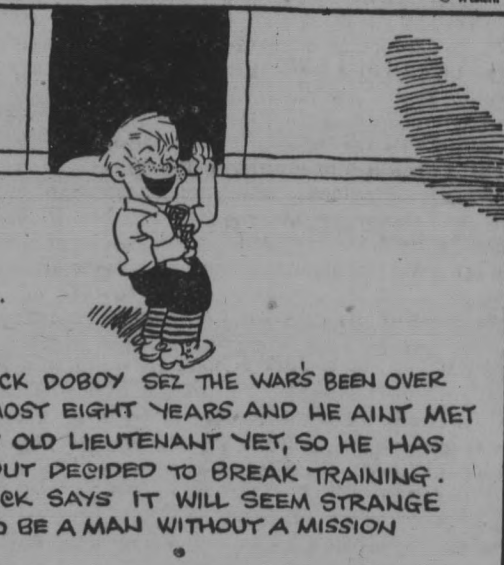

"Well, why are you back so soon?" queried the farmer.

"I'm after more dogs."

"More dogs? Those were good dogs I gave you."

"I know, but I've shot all those dogs already."

THE NEXT WAR

THOUGHT, that intangible, incomprehensible, yet irresistible force which moves mountains, which precedes the steam shovels in their conquest of continents, leads ships through uncharted seas and extends into space to weigh and analyze nebula and measure celestial cycles, has other powers; powers none the less potent because more gradual in their accomplishment; none the less true because less obvious. These are the powers exerted by mind upon mind; the reaction of the mob to an impulse; a sort of mass hypnosis.

A single thought will sometimes influence nations, build up or overthrow empires, or plunge a whole world into war. The conquests of Alexander were the outgrowth of a thought; the desire for power. The late war was the same; one man's ambition, influencing the mental attitude of a whole nation, and finally precipitating the bloodiest war of history.

For these reasons it is, perhaps, not with unfounded alarm that we view a tendency upon the part of some in this country to accept another and greater war as a certainty of the immediate future.

At a meeting held in this city this week plans were talked of for the next war with the same assurance that plans are made for a new building or a new street.

America must be protected, there is no doubt of that, but protection can become a mania. In 1913 the militarists of Germany would have told us that the preparations which had been under way in that country for the half century preceding were for the protection of their country. But the line of demarcation between protection and aggression is so vague and so easily lost to view, that a fully protected nation easily verges into a militarist; and great military and naval forces instead of serving to protect the citizens of the country, finally throw them into the very maelstrom from which they were calculated to save them.

We must have protection from without, but we must also have protection against forces within, even from ourselves. To much thinking and planning for the next war can have only one outcome—war. Millions faced the late war with hope, it was the "war to end war." Thousands gave their lives with that hope in mind. But all the agony and suffering, all the sacrifice and privation will mean nothing if the world is still to welter on in blood and carnage while Moloch shares his trouble. But if it should happen that one of the pro-

PASSING IT ALONG

THE fact that some stranger has passed a bad check off on you may be bad news for you, but it may also be good news to your neighbor if it saves them from being duped by the same rascal. There have been numerous reports of late of bad check artists working along the peninsula. Too frequently, however, the news of the presence in town of one of these scoundrels comes too late for any practical good.

To remedy this situation to some extent at least, it has been proposed that a committee from the Chamber of Commerce call on each merchant and ask his co-operation in apprehending these miscreants. If strangers ask to cash a check after buying a small order of goods, urges the chamber of commerce, ask for satisfactory identification. If they cannot identify themselves properly, call the police as soon as they leave, and have them followed. If they are all right the police will soon find it out and there will be no trouble. But if it should happen that one of the professional crooks who are working the bay section should be located, a decided favor would be conferred upon all business men of the district.

If all merchants would co-operate with the police and with each other in this regard, bad check artists would soon learn to steer clear of Redwood City.

THE AVIATION FIELD

TWENTY years ago an aeroplane was a curiosity rather than a practical mechanical appliance. Today the aeroplane is just beginning to come into a position of importance in the commercial world. What developments the next twenty years will bring about we can only surmise.

We can imagine that when Stevenson's first locomotive chugged its slow way along the crude tracks that whether or not a town possessed a suitable site for a railway station, occupied little thoughts in the minds of the citizens of that time. Today, however, a town without a railway station is unheard of. In fact, such a thing can scarcely be imagined as possible.

So it may not be too wild a speculation to suggest that within another twenty years the aeroplane may have come to such a point of development that a town without an air field may be in the same category as a town would be today without any railway communication.

Another point on which it is safe to forecast is that property values on the peninsula will never be lower than they are today. They will in all likelihood be far higher, perhaps many times what they are now. If then Redwood City is to secure an air port, now is the time to give the matter careful consideration.

We have no definite plan to suggest. That is for the Chamber of Commerce, the Realty Board or some organization closely in touch with real estate and commercial conditions. But we would urge the careful consideration of the general public to any such plan as may be offered.

Motor Laws Explained

By George E. Sanford,
Attorney California State
Automobile Association

The third of the amendments to the California Vehicle Act affecting operators' licenses is that which treats with reckless driving, recognized as one of the most serious offenses in motor vehicle operation. Formerly, three convictions for speeding within a year constituted automatic revocation of the operator's license. The law has been amended to provide that the Division shall forthwith revoke the license of any person convicted upon three charges of reckless driving within a period of 12 months from the time of the first conviction.

This substitution of three reckless driving convictions for three speeding convictions within a year, as cause of license revocation was written into the law by the legislature upon the theory that fast driving in itself is not as dangerous a practice as reckless driving. Recklessness in motor vehicle operation is not defined solely by speed limits. The driver who cuts corners, holds the middle of the road on mountain curves, dashes through safety zones or passes at intersections is the greatest menace of the highway. The California law defines reckless driving briefly and clearly in the following words.

found in Section 121 of the California Vehicle Act:

"Any person who knowingly and wilfully drives any vehicle upon a public highway, either without due caution and circumspection or in such manner as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person, shall be guilty of reckless driving. The penalty provided in this Section for reckless driving is a county jail sentence of from five days to ninety days or a fine of from $25 to $250, or both fine and imprisonment. This is the penalty on conviction for an individual act of reckless driving. So that the habitually reckless driver may be barred from street and highway, the law now goes a step further and provides for revocation of driving license on three such convictions.

WOMEN CAN NOW DO MORE

Because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Keeps Them Well

Fifty years ago there were few occupations for women. Some taught school, some did housework, some found work to do at home and a few took up nursing. Today there are very few occupations not open to women. They work in factories with hundreds of other women and girls. There are also women architects, lawyers, dentists, executives, and legislators. But all too often a woman wins her economic independence at the cost of her health.

Mrs. Elizabeth Chamberlain who works in the Unionall factory making overalls writes that she got "wonderful results" from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mrs. Chamberlain lives at 500 Monmouth St., Trenton, N. J. She recommends the Vegetable Compound to her friends in the factory and will gladly answer any letters she gets from women asking about it.

If Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

Had Origin in "Netting"
Crocheting, as well as knitting, is believed to have developed from the ancient art of netting. The word "crochet" first appeared in the English language in the year 1648.

As We Grow Older
Proper Kidney Function Is More Than Ever Important.

As we grow older, there is apt to be a gradual slowing up of bodily functions. The kidneys are the blood filters. If their action becomes sluggish they do not thoroughly cleanse the blood of poisonous wastes. This tends to make one tired and achy, with often a nagging headache, drowsy headaches and dizziness. A common symptom of imperfect kidney action is scanty or burning urination.

Elderly people recommend Doan's Pills. This tested diuretic is endorsed the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Wonderful Animal Is the Sea Crab

The sea crab is a wonderful animal, and could teach man something that would greatly enhance his civility, says Robert O'Neal of Tampa, Fla. The females shed their shells during the early spring, which leaves their bodies white and tender and a lure for small fish, at whose mercy they would be in short order, but Mr. Crab attends to all this in true husband style. While his mate is feeding along the shore in shallow water he follows closely and guards every attack with his strong claws. I have watched this performance often with interest from the shore for some distance. The female wanders leisurely along apparently unconcerned, while the male is kept busy grabbing at the numerous fish as they constantly make a rush for a bite. Should he cease his vigilance for a moment his mate would soon be seized and devoured. When the male crab eats or sleeps is a mystery.

Polish Women Now Active in Politics

Polish women are steadily increasing their political activities. They have elected more members of their own sex to office than have their sisters in the United States. Indeed, a report recently made to the Zurich bureau of the Socialist and Labor International.

As a result of the recent municipal elections in Warsaw there are eleven women on the board of aldermen. Five of the women members belong to the Polish Socialist party, five to the various bourgeois groups, and one woman belongs to the Jewish Labor party. During the municipal campaign much stress was laid on the fact that the Socialist program in Poland calls for special legal protection for mothers and children.

Panama "Home of Orchid"

The designation, "Home of the Orchid," has been applied to Panama because of the great varieties of orchids found there. It has been explained that this is due to the fact that, though Panama is small, it is a great variation of climate, ranging from the humid lowlands of the jungle to the mountains of Chiriqui, which attain an altitude of more than 5,000 feet. From the earliest times Panama has been a fruitful field for the orchid collector, and the first professional collector of which there is a record was Louis Née, a French artist, who visited Panama in 1780 and in 1789.

Almost a Vacuum

The nearest approach to the creation of a vacuum has been accomplished by Prof. R. W. Sorenson at the California Institute of Technology at Pasadena. In connection with the high-tension transmission plants, he has made a glass bulb containing only one-millionth part of its original content of air. This near-vacuum prevents arcing when the current is suddenly shut off as it is often necessary to do.

After twenty years' work in his spare time, William Andre, a Swiss guide, has just completed a hand-carved wooden bas-relief, which contains 600 figures, each perfect in detail. The new minister was calling on the Smiths. Alone for a minute with Bobby, eight, he was getting some of the family history without whitewash or varnish. "And what is your father's religion?" asked the minister. "Well, from what mother says every little while I guess he is a Seven Day Absentist."

Lazy Patient—Sure. Lots of times I take the checker board out on the porch.

The heavy brows of Skene lifted in a look, close to contempt, which he cast at the speaker. "Breault, I've been in place for years and you tell me that black hair of yours was cut? This Elkman man was civil and I was civil. I was after some shells. But don't forget the message he sent you. He said if that black Frenchman ever showed up at this place again, he'd get a knife stuck into him. And I'm betting he told the truth—he had with him. Breault laughed derisively. "I once knew de squaw."
"Yes," added McDonald. "Get this straight in your thick head. You keep away from the squaws this winter here. We're after fur—not women."

Angered, Breault sneered viciously. "You don't have to worry about de women."
In scarlet patches blood smeared the matted face of the man in the box. The deep blue of his eyes blackened—then flamed. STORY FROM THE START

Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of wounded lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkman. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realized cost him the love of his fiancée, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer. With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his first friend, Garth meets Dorotea, a carrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarter complaints he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald." At Elkman an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him. Garth in his heart knows better. Three of McDonald's party visit Elkman seeking to buy gun shells. Dorotea then Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning him and Ninda. With Etienne's help Garth wins the friendship of Saul Souci, "medicine man" of the Crees, and gets his promise to persuade the factor to take their furs to Elkman instead of to McDonald. Garth is ambushed by Joe Mokoman, Ninda's reputed father, whom the factor had driven from Elkman. "Shot," Garth's already companion on many battles, he is saved, and the Indian is taken, a prisoner, to Elkman. Garth, Mokoman, and McDonald with a message of defiance, and the war is on.

"So you saw Joe Mokoman, did you, Skene?" The bass of McDonald boomed the silence with an odd, slurring articulation, due to the misshapen lips. "Yes, he says he's covered most of the camps at this end of the island. Of course, the blizzard held him up." "And they'll come in with their fur, Christmas week?"

"Most of 'em will, he thinks." The older man wrinkled his bushy brows as he filled his pipe. "These two half-breeds from Iktovik, Fred and Ina, that shuck beyond Big point, have been after them hard, you know. They've given 'em the same talk the Hudson's Bay handed 'em—about our poor stuff, and cheating."

"By gar!" burst out Breault. "I run dese people off de island, toute suite. Where is dere camp?"

"You would, would you?" drawled McDonald. "You don't seem to realize that we're anchored here in this ice until May. Do you want the French and the Hudson's Bay to not know that a gang of pirates are running amuck on the bay? We can't fight the government, you know. We're here to take out the fur chest of Akimiski, not to lose the schooner, the fur, and stand trial in the bargain, for God knows what."

Breault's face darkened behind his black beard as he muttered in feeble protest, his small eyes shifting from his chief to Skene for support of his suggestion.

The sober Skene shook his head. "No! If you manhandled those French company men, we'd be in a nasty mess, tied up here with two years' trade of fur. A snug nest egg for each of us for the government to confiscate. You're crazy, Breault."

"Now what do we learn of the whereabouts of this treaty chief, Souci, whom Guthrie landed with him?"

"Joe says he headed for the north end of the island to find his sons. He hasn't been seen since."

"Well, you can bet he's out to beat us if he can, but how can he keep those hunters away from us this Christmas if the strait is open? The Indians say it seldom closes until January."

"He can't," agreed Skene. "They'll never wait till then to cross the ice to Elkman when they know we'll pay more for the fur right here, within easy reach. They always have a blow-out New Year's, and they'll come here to have it. We'll give 'em a good one. We can afford to."

"Right-o!" McDonald nodded, then added: "Your hunch on this Elkman man seems to be borne out by his bucking the ice in that York boat. Only a man with guts would tackle that strait in a tub."

"There ain't no doubt about his color," said Skene with finality, exhalant a cloud of smoke. "He's due to give us a fight, as he wrote you—just how I don't see, but I've seen enough fightin' men in the last five years to know the look of 'em. He's one."

"He mus' scare you, my fren', lectie bit, w'en you meet 'em on de beach," bantered Breault.

The heavy brows of Skene lifted in a look, close to contempt, which he cast at the speaker. "Breault, I've been in place for years and you tell me that black hair of yours was cut? This Elkman man was civil and I was civil. I was after some shells. But don't forget the message he sent you. He said if that black Frenchman ever showed up at this place again, he'd get a knife stuck into him. And I'm betting he told the truth—he had with him. When the strait freezes, why don't you go and find out?"

that to me, you slacker, and I'll hammer you into jelly."

Still in his seat, Skene stolidly puffed at his pipe, watching through the corners of half-closed eyes the groping right hand of the Frenchman. The master of the Ghost swallowed hard—choked. His eyes wavered—then fell before the flaming mask, grotesque, terrible in its fury, of the man who bent toward him. The moving hand of Breault stopped—limp.

Slowly McDonald regained his seat, the sweat standing in beads on his wide, bronzed forehead. Refilling his pipe, he lighted it and, ignoring the rebuked Breault, turned to Skene.

"Where were we? Oh, yes! Now, when does Joe start for the other end of the island? I'm curious to learn what that old Souci is up to."

"Now that he's got a dog-team, he intends to start—"

The voices of men on deck, excitedly hailing some one on the ice, cut off Skene.

McDonald called, "what's the fuss about on deck?"

"Dog-team on the ice," came the reply.

The three men got into Eskimo parkas and went on deck. Halfway from the shore a dog-team was making its way over the lumpy ice of the cove.

"Who is it? Recognize him?" asked Skene of the east coast Cree interpreter, who was wintering on the Ghost. "It's not Joe?"

The Indian shook his head. Presently the hooded driver of the approaching huskies called: "Kequay!" and shortly reached the rail of the schooner, watched by the curious knot of men on deck.

Making his dogs fast, the stranger clambered aboard, and with a grave face, shook the hand of each of the group—then spoke in Cree to the interpreter.

"Who is he?" asked McDonald. "He's got a cut in his hair that's different from most of these Crees. Shrewd looking old party."

"He says he's Souci, Treaty Chief of the Elkman Crees," replied the interpreter. "He came to mak' talk with McDonald. Ha! Ha!"

"What's this?" said the latter in an undertone. "Why, it's the bird Guthrie put ashore with Joe to work against us."

"Here's our chance to put one over on Mr. Hudson's Bay," chuckled Skene. "He must have a proposition to make, or he would have kept away from us. He's got nerve, I'll say. Joe told me he'd shoot him if he met him on the island."

Shortly the old Indian, the fur hood of his caribou cap pushed back from a shock of raven hair, sat in the warm cabin with McDonald and Skene. His story, told through the interpreter, for he said he spoke no English, was brief. Yes, as they had been told, he was Treaty Chief of the Elkman Crees, and had been sent by Guthrie to attempt to hold the trade until the strait closed. But the Hudson's Bay company had a cold heart. It always had given the hunters little for their fur, and now when others came to trade, and threatened to take the fur from the old company, its heart was still cold, and it offered less than the new traders. He, Souci, a chief, had been promised reward if he saved part of the trade and brought it to Elkman, but what reward? It was the pay of a squaw. "His two sons already had three black fox pelts and eight silvers—worth double what the factor at Elkman had promised for his winter's work. Now, he had great influence with the Cree hunters—was a shaman, and many of them would wait until the strait closed and go to Elkman. What would McDonald Ha! Ha! offer for the services of Souci, Chief of the Elkman Crees, to bring the northern hunters to the schooner at Christmas?"

"Well! I'll say he's a cool one," laughed McDonald. "He comes right inside our wire to our trenches and wants to bargain. The Hudson's Bay probably haven't offered him much. But he's trying to sell us what we'll get anyway."

"What's his price?" demanded Skene. The interpreter talked rapidly with Souci, then replied with a grin: "He say he wan' tree rifle, tree goose-gun, and trade-good for ten prime black fox. Hees own fur he trade, also."

"Ten black fox—two thousand dollars in trade-goods? Nonsense!" McDonald scowled fiercely into the bony face of the old shaman with his leathery skin, mapped with lines. The beady eyes of Souci, unwavering, gave look for look. For a space the cold blue eyes probed the black inscrutability of the Cree's stare. Slowly the caliber of Saul Souci rose in appraisal of the white man. Here was an Indian of parts—nerve, brains, power. As a medicine man, of use, if his service were needed. But his price was ridiculous—his help not necessary. They had Joe Mokoman. It was enough.

"Suppose, by chance, the strait should close this year?" threw out Skene.

"It never has, so early," McDonald thought a space, then turned to the interpreter. "Offer him the guns and the value of five black fox."

The face of old Souci darkened as the interpreter communicated the offer. He shook his head in anger. "Well, that's our limit," said McDonald, rising. "Tell him we don't need him, but we'll pay him a good price for his fur if he'll bring it in at once."

Silent in his disappointment, Souci went on deck, followed by the others. Freeing his impatient dogs, the old chief turned to the men watching from the rail and said quietly in English: "Guthrie! Tomorrow I tak' de fox to Elkman." "Go! fly or swim?" laughed Skene, joined loudly by the group on deck.

The lean face of the dog-driver framed in its fur hood was wooden in its placidity, as he coolly said: "De strait freeze hard two sleeps back!" And cracking his long whip, he leaped on the tail of his toboggan and was off.

"What! The strait is closed?" gasped McDonald, seizing Skene by the shoulder. "Frozen solid, he said! Hello, there, Souci!" cried the excited trader to the fast-traveling dog-team. "You, Pierre! Get after him and bring him back. Tell him we'll give him his price. Strait frozen! H—l, Skene! Now we've got to fight for that fur!"

"The clever beggar!" exclaimed McDonald in admiration. "Played us like a salmon. Waited to spring his trump card, and got his own price without a hassle! Knew he was shrewd—nervy! Speaks English, too! The old wizard! He's the chap we need now. Our little job is to stop a stampede across that ice for the Christmas feast that Guthrie has promised the Crees at Elkman."

Skene swung over the rail and announced to his chief: "Souci says he'll start north at once and agrees to hold his relations and most of the rest, on the terms he offered. He wants to bind the bargain with you, personally."

"Good!" And McDonald vaulted over the schooner's rail, followed by Skene and Breault.

"The strait was closed two sleeps back? Where?" he demanded of the Indian.

"Vair de shoul at Beeg point." "You saw it?" "I cross to de Elkman."

"What? You've crossed the ice to the post?"

The Indian nodded, his stone-hard features an enigma to the men who sought to read them.

"What did you learn?"

"Dis Guthrie know de ice set, and all de Cree cum to Elkman. He say he keve me nothin' to work for hem." Saul Souci grinned into the gaping faces surrounding him. "Onlee Saul Souci get you all dat fox from de north, now."

McDonald thrust out a red, mittless hand. "It's a bargain! You bring that trade here and you get three rifles, three shotguns, and the value of ten prime black fox in trade."

Dropping his rabbit-skin mitten on its neck thong, Souci took the extended hand of the trader. "Kiyam appowiya, it ees good," he said, solemnly. Thrusting his hand into the hanging mitten, he cracked the whip of plaited caribou thongs over his lead dog's ears, and again started for the shore, leaving behind him on the ice an arguing group of mystified and excited men.

CHAPTER VII

The morning subsequent to the nights of withering frost which clinched the grip of the ice on the west coast, Garth and Etienne, muffled in blanket capotes and fur robes, drove their five-dog team, hitched to a runner sled for one work, out of the closed delta of the Elkman and down the coast. Inland, the wide marshes the ripples of drift, like a white sea, to the outguards of the space, or lay, parti-colored, patches of dead grass buried of snow, splashing the white levels with ochre and dun. Splitting the frozen shell of the strait broken by pressure ridges and heaps of shattered ice, a streak of black to the east marked the still open channel. Beyond, the hidden sun, breaking from the bay, rimmed the barrens of Akimiski with fire.

But it was to the south, where the great point of the island pushed its bulk into the strait that Garth hoped to find that the abnormal December cold had built a bridge of ice to Akimiski. Over the easy going of wind-hammered snow and shore ice, the dogs romped past the frozen beaches. At a sandpit strewn with boulders Garth stopped. With a hand from Etienne, he reached the top of a large rock and taking his binoculars from their case, studied the miles of ice-sheathed shoals which followed the thrust of Big point toward the mainland. As he looked, his lips moved in a muttered note of surprise. Could it be that luck had come to Elkman—that Garth Guthrie, in the shape of a road of ice from Akimiski before Christmas?

"Come up here, quick!" he called to the man at the sled. The halfbreed scrambled to the top of the boulder. "I can't make out open water over there," said Garth, excitedly. "You take a look. It was a mile wide the day before the blow."

Dropping his mittens, Etienne took the proffered glasses. Until his hands reddened with cold, he stood as if hewn from the boulder. Then, when the column of his frosted breath mist of the lenses, he handed the glasses to Garth, his eyes snapping with excitement. "De ice set oval dem bar; he cried, sliding from the boulder and running to the impatient dogs.

"We'll take rations for a week," said Guthrie, "round up the Elkman hunters Saul is sure of, and chase them over the ice. McDonald may not know for days that the strait is closed here. He's thirty miles away."

The willing huskies, urged by the crack of Etienne's whip, took the back trail to the post on the run. The success of the undertaking hung largely on speed, and while Marie loudly bewailed the rashness of the move, seconded by the vehement protests of old Anne, tent, robes and provisions were hurriedly stowed and lashed.

When Anne opened the gate, with a leap Saul reached Guthrie, busy with a sled lashing, and man and dog rolled in the snow. Shielding his face with a mittener hand from the attacks of a hot tongue, Garth finally calmed the delirious dog, while Etienne checked the yelping huskies, keen to punish such familiarity with the factor of Elkman.

SUITS OF NOVELTY TWEEDS; FOX FUR NECKPIECE POPULAR

SEEKING enlightenment as to fall suit trends? Well, here is a "last word" model which speaks for itself in its mannish tweed fabric, its short skirt with its adroit plait at one side and its swag-cut coat. It is Marion Nixon, she who holds forth in movie-dom to the delight of vast audiences, who has stepped into the autumn picture clad as you see.

With this eminently correct and "easy-to-look-at" suit Miss Nixon wears a ravishing red suede vest. It tones the whole outfit. A bit of the red suede escapes from the vest to do is the "nifty" thing for general wear. Bravo for the girl who has remained constant to her fur accessories throughout torrid summer days. Now is the time of her reward, in autumn breezes do begin to blow, in what so "comfy" as well as satisfying to her vanity on a fleck fall day, as throat.

To say that these fashionable accessories are "foxy" describes them more ways than one. From the modish standpoint they are all of that. When it comes to the fur itself every duty as a boutonniere and on the pocket and collar as a "note of color." A sports felt hat of tan, with matching shoes and bag, give a perfect fitness to this ensemble.

The sturdy rough tweed suits now so fashionable are directly in contrast to the elaboration movement of woman's costume which marks this season. For that reason they achieve a more than usual distinctiveness. As to length of skirts, this depends whether one is considering the subject from the American or Paris standpoint. French couturiers are inclined to somewhat longer lengths, but women here, especially the flapper age, are proving quite defiant, many of them insisting on continuing a display of knees. Of course Paris usually wins in the final, but just now brevity is the rule, especially for the youthful style enthusiasts in America.

Another item of interest—the smartest suits have not an inch of fur in sight as actual trimming, this because branch of the fox family tree is represented in autumn's style parade. There is pointed fox in all its glory, blue fox, red, platinum and beige. As to white fox it holds its own triumphantly, regardless of the fact that it has been doing strenuous duty the whole summer through.

Imagination cannot picture anything more "swanky" in the way of a fall costume or suit enhanced with a tapering fox scarf. The autumn landscape will be crowded with just such.

A fox neckpiece never fails to enrich the dressy three-piece ensemble, as this pictures so charmingly proves. With the smart tweed suit of autumn vogue, there is nothing so swaggy as a handsome fox fur piece, preferably in beige or in platinum.

Perhaps the newest in fox fur pieces are the double or twin animal type. These two-in-one models are necessarily luxuriously long, joining as they do two furs at the back of the neck, which is in keeping with the trend to of the vogue for the separate fur piece. Every one who can afford it is going to own a beige or platinum fox fur scarf this fall.

Seems as if browns are to have their inning this season, lovely chestnut shades, cocoa, deep leaf tones and the like, which of course establishes the color trend for novelty cloth suits.

More formal type suits appear in black and also in leafy-colored broadcloths, but it is the sports suit which ward heavily furled effects for fall and winter.

In neckpieces there is also a marked tendency to wear sable. This fur, by the way, is receiving marked attention in the styling of garments of distinction.

Flat-fur coats richly collared and cuffed with fox are conspicuously present in advance style showings.

INCORPORATION HEADQUARTERS IN NEW BANK BUILDING

The promoters of incorporation have opened headquarters in the new bank building where all are invited to come and secure information about the all-important question. All the friction that heretofore existed has apparently been dissipated so that the way for incorporation is smooth and everyone is working in harmony for the incorporation of Menlo Park. It is the general consensus of opinion at this time that the proposition will be successful at the polls when the election is called. Every citizen now sees the necessity of incorporation, its potential value to the community and its absolute urgency for the protection of this section. The town needs traffic regulations, police protection and the enforcement of the zoning laws. All bickerings, factional feelings and prejudices of all sort should be set aside at this time in order that the long delayed accomplishment of incorporation may be reached.

Death of Jules F. Bernard

After many months of suffering following a paralytic stroke, Jules F. Bernard passed to the great beyond last Sunday evening surrounded by the members of his devoted family. With pliant resignation he bore bravely his affliction, knowing that when the final summons came from on high his body would be relieved of pain and his soul out of prison. The deceased was a true Christian, living an upright life and striving for a career of service for his fellow man. He was a loving husband and a devoted father. He closely observed the tenets of his religion, always doing good and showing kindness to every one with whom he came in contact. His death was peaceful, calmly he closed his eyes in a deep sleep, passing to his reward in that other and better world beyond. Mr. Bernard was a native of France, aged 66 years. He is survived by his widow, Melanie Bernard, two daughters, Pauline and Marie Bernard and two sons, Rev. Father Leon Bernard of Sonoma and Alime Bernard. The funeral on Tuesday was largely attended by sorrowing relatives and friends.

"Snow Ball" Meets Terrible Death

"Snow Ball," a bull terrier owned by William Silliant, met a violent death last Tuesday while crossing the highway from his owner's barber shop. A motorist going through town at a speed of fifty-five miles an hour struck the canine and went on without ascertaining the injuries of the animal. Fortunately it was a dog and not a child that was killed. It would have met the same fate so far as the driver was concerned. The very best argument the proponents of incorporation have is the regulation of the street traffic in town. It appears that the traveling public has no regard for the rights of the pedestrian. It must be restrained and the only way to do this is to have traffic officers on the principal corners in town. If the community is incorporated this will be done. Let's all pull for incorporation.

Meat Market Burglarized

The Menlo Meat Market was burglarized some time Sunday night by some unknown person or persons. An entrance was effected through the rear door. Several hams, large quantities of meat and numerous rashers of bacon and the sum of $45 were taken. There is no clue to the theft. It is evident that the party or parties drove up in an automobile and after getting into the shop piled the meats into the car, and securing the cash, drove off. Constable Grill is working on the case but has no clue to ferret out the crime.

Death of Martin L. Clark

Following a lingering illness Martin L. Clark, a pioneer resident of Menlo Park, passed away early Monday morning surrounded by his family. The deceased came here from Gilroy thirty years ago, purchasing the confectionery business of the late Philip Prineville then located in the Loughran building. Barbers Must Send Pictures to Sacramento

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 1.—Barbers of California, if they wish to barbers longer, must step up before the camera and have their photos taken, the State Board of Barber Examiners, newly created, announced yesterday. With his application for a license, each applicant must submit his photograph with his signature on the reverse side.

Application blanks for licenses will be ready for distribution by Sept. 10, according to Chairman Joseph Haywood, and barbers can get the blanks at the headquarters of the local organization of either the Master Barbers Association or the State Federation of Journeymen Barbers, and at barber supply houses. The headquarters of the new board are at Room 407, Plaza building, Sacramento.

C. E. Rynearson, Marysville, has been designated secretary of the board, and C. L. Butts, Los Angeles, is chief examiner.

BURGLARS ENTER STORE; TAKE $20

Twenty dollars in cash was removed by burglars early Saturday morning from the Levin Auto Supply Company's store on the corner of Brewster street and the state highway. The burglars gained admission to the store through a skylight, dropping 18 feet to the floor. They found $20 in cash and then threw a quantity of merchandise through a transom above the front door. Several bikes of inner tubes, tires and other articles were thrown out. Evidently, however, the burglars were frightened away before they could get the goods which they had removed for it was left on the sidewalk.

Police Officers Thorpe and Mengola found the merchandise where it had been thrown out, and believing that the burglars were still within and would return for the goods, had the building surrounded, but nothing was seen of the robbers.

NEW STATE CABINET MEETS WITH YOUNG

By Esto Broughton

Special to the Times-Gazette
SACRAMENTO, September 1.—Governor C. C. Young's nine gubernatorial team, which forms the new state cabinet held its first meeting this week.

It was an historic event for the first time in history California's governor and the various state department heads gathered around a large table and talked over their mutual problems in governmental affairs like a business directorate. The state cabinet meeting will hereafter be a monthly event.

It was also historic because it commemorated the recent simplification, which has gone on in the state's government, culminating in the concentration of many independent functions in four new department directors created by the 1927 legislature, making a total of nine departments functioning now.

In 1919 there were 112 entirely independent boards and commissions in California. At that time it would have been necessary for the governor to have "hired a hall" if he had wanted to have met with them all at once.

Most of these have been grouped under the nine directors and by 1927 all of them will be grouped under the eleven directors, which are contemplated when the reorganization plan is completed.

The state directorate is composed of eight men and one woman:

A. A. Heron, Berkeley, director of finance.

Bert B. Meek, Marysville, director of public works.

Dr. Walter M. Dickie, Los Angeles, director of public health.

Fred G. Stevenot, Carson Hill, director of natural resources.

Mrs. Anna L. Saylor, Berkeley, director of social welfare.

Earl Jensen, Los Angeles, director of institutions.

George H. Hecke, Woodland, director of agriculture.

William John Cooper, San Diego, director of education.

John McGilvray, Sacramento, director of industrial relations.

New Record Is Made

We Californians like to brag about our far-flung system of paved highways yet there are many heavily traveled roads in this state that are not paved, and many that are rough, sandy and tortuous, where average highway speed is almost an impossibility, and there are grades steep enough to at least daunt the timid, if not those who have confidence in their cars, and are familiar with mountain driving.

Illustrative of the rather fast time and good economy that is possible over some of the worst of these unpaved roads, is the trip of a Whippet Coach, made last week from Stockton over the Silver Lake road and Carson Pass, and back by way of the famous Tioga.

The Whippet was driven by Joe Lusignea, Stockton dealer, and Charles Steele of the Willys-Overland Pacific Company, and in its trip there was plenty of opportunity for demonstrating the car's ruggedness and hardness in the mountain country and its ability to stand the gaff of steep mountain grades where traction is difficult as well as its qualities of comfort and economy.

The car left Stockton with Lusignea at the wheel, at nine o'clock in the evening. Just 18 hours and 52 minutes later, or at 5:52 the next afternoon, it returned to Stockton without having missed a shot, and with an average gasoline mileage of 23 1/2 which is very low for the high Sierra country.

The run was not made as a speed test although very good time was made. The route was by way of Lockeford, Glendale, where a seventeen mile detour was necessary. Jackson, Pine Grove and the Silver Lake road through Cook's station and Ham Station, up Peddler Hill to an elevation of 7,000 feet, then down to Silver Lake at an altitude of 6,800 feet; up again to Carson Spur at 7,200 feet, where there is a monument to this famous pioneer and scout, Kit Carson; down again into Hope Valley, and on through Woodford, where the first five gallon addition was made to the gasoline supply.

Then came Gardnerville, across the line in Nevada, where they lost eight miles by mistaking their way; and then to Bridgeport in California at an altitude of 8,475 feet, where they stopped for breakfast at 9:20. From Bridgeport the way lies over still another grade, from the summit of which is a beautiful sight looking down on Mono Lake 1500 feet below. From Mono Lake the way led through Devil's Gap and up the famous Leavine grade, where the Whippet climbed 4,962 feet in four and one-half miles, all second gear work, passing four cars on the way to the summit—a four and three sixes.

The car continued on upward and over Tioga Pass, where an elevation of 9,941 feet is reached at the summit. It was so cold here the Whippet crew had to keep the car's windows closed. At the summit they put in another five gallons of gasoline, and fixed a puncture.

The grade led downward from here, from the headwaters of the famous Hetch Hetchy to Tuolumne Meadows, and within 8 miles of the floor of Yosemite Valley. They passed Lake Tenaya, then up over another grade three and one-half miles long, and out of Yosemite Park at the Aspen checking station to Carl's Inn. Then the route lay through Groveland, Chinese Camp, Oakdale and on to Stockton, where it took only 3 1/2 gallons of gasoline to fill the tank, and a single quart of oil to make up for that used on the trip.

According to Lusignea the Whippet performed wonderfully during the entire trip, and he claims the four-wheel brakes were a great aid in negotiating the sharp curves and switchbacks that make up so much of this strenuous route.

Board of Supervisors Hear Argument

Improvements Sought In Institutions

Action Postponed on Bridge Franchise

When representatives of H. W. Thompson, bridge engineer of San Francisco, appeared before the board of supervisors Monday to ask for a permit for a bridge across San Francisco Bay at a point near Candlestick point, the matter was again continued, this time for two weeks. The hearing was a lively one, and resulted in considerable debate among proponents of various bay bridge projects.

Among those who opposed the granting of the bridge were two San Francisco supervisors, James McSheehy and Frank Havenor. Both of the San Francisco supervisors opposed the granting of the franchise to Thompson on the ground that it would militate against the securing of a permit from the war department by San Francisco to have a bridge at the McSheehy and Frank Havenor, the San Francisco Bay Terminal Co. also spoke against the proposal, urging the supervisors to co-operate with the San Francisco board, for he stated any progress by San Francisco would reflect directly upon this territory.

Frank E. Webb, who at one time held a franchise to construct a bridge across the bay at Little Coyote point, and is now seeking a franchise for a point near the bridge against the granting of a franchise to Thompson, as he said that Thompson would not secure a war department sanction for a bridge such as he planned, and the granting of the permit by the board would delay his (Webb's) own franchise.

Objections were answered by representatives of Thompson who stated that the Thompson petition was backed by Dr. Lillian Hall of New York, noted bridge expert, and Col. Goethals, builder of the Panama canal, as well as by a large New York banking concern.

Warm debates were staged among the various interests on each of the points in question. Fred H. Drake, president of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce, questioned the position of the bridge, for he stated if the bridge were on Candlestick point, it would be in San Francisco county and the San Mateo county board would have no jurisdiction in the matter. This was satisfactorily answered by reading the application which states that the bridge shall be in San Mateo county, just south of the point.

Webb charged there would never be a bridge built across San Francisco bay from San Francisco county because of a navy department ruling that has been holding up the San Francisco project for several months. Webb addressed the supervisors of both counties.

Webb stated that the Thompson bridge project could never receive the sanction of the navy department as its course to Webster street in Alameda interfered with the proposed Alameda naval base while his plans for a bridge to Bay Farm Island would in no way interfere with any navy projects. Colonel Webb stated that he had ample finances for his project and offered to leave substantiating documents with Attorney Hall C. Ross for the information of the supervisors.

Webb stated further that the government departments were cognizant of his plans and knew of his work in pioneering the bridge movements in this district and that he would be glad to assist the promoters of the Coyote-Hayward bridge to get government approval and permits if he was granted a franchise from Candlestick point.

He told the supervisors of San Francisco that there was no possibility of the navy department rescinding its ruling against any bridge north of Hunter's Point which had been in effect for 69 years. He explained that it was a vital caution to prevent the bottling of the navy in case of war. Webb then urged the San Mateo county supervisors to consider the vast amount of work he had put in to prepare his plans for bridges from San Mateo county to the Alameda shore and to thoroughly investigate his financial plans which he declared were absolutely sound and grant his franchise for the good of San Mateo county.

Following a lengthy debate Supervisor Rosalie Brown moved that the franchise be denied Supervisor Francis, however stated that he did not know all the merits of the case, and would vote neither way until he knew more concerning the matter. When Supervisor Brown's motion failed for want of a second, Supervisor Thompson moved that the matter be laid over for two weeks in order that a more extended investigation of the matter might be made. This motion was seconded by Supervisor Francis and passed.

In making her motion Supervisor Brown stated that she was in favor of any bay bridge which could be successfully erected, but that as a permit had already been granted for a bridge from Burlingame to Alameda, that franchise for other bridges should not be granted until this

OVERCROWDED CONDITIONS EXIST IN INSTITUTIONS

Special to the Times-Gazette
SACRAMENTO, Sept. 1.—Laying the over-crowded conditions of the state institutions before the governor's council, Earl Jensen stated that California was caring for 1000 more inmates in her institutions now than they were designed to accommodate.

Twenty per cent of these, he considered, might be released with proper care and educational facilities at home. When he took office six months ago, Jensen said, he found 500 inmates in the institutions sleeping on the floor. These are now being properly cared for and are provided with beds although the sleeping quarters are still crowded.

The correctional schools are filling up faster than the present state building program can take care of them, the director of institutions reported. There are 500 on the waiting list to gain admission to the homes for the feeble minded. The Glen Ellen home is full, and the new institution at Pacific Colony has taken care of 100 children but when it is completed it can only take care of a portion of those waiting.

The Mendocino State Hospital is being reserved for the segregation of the criminal insane at that institution, Jensen explained, while the hospital at Patton will be set aside for the tubercular insane.

The launching of a survey to determine the efficiency of state employees in the hospitals and correctional schools under his guidance has been begun by Jensen.

During the past three months the number of patients paroled and discharged from the state institutions has increased seventy-five per cent, it was reported.

At the same time the number of violent cases restrained by mechanical devices, such as straight jackets, has decreased from 200 to only 12.

one was completed, and that she felt that the board should grant only one bay bridge franchise at a time.

California Health Shows a Great Improvement

Special to the Times-Gazette
SACRAMENTO, Sept. 1.—Day by day in every way, the state of California's health is growing better and better, it appeared in the report given at the cabinet meeting by Dr. Dickie.

Except for the infantile paralysis outbreak, the director stated Californians are in an unusually healthy condition at present. And he predicted that this epidemic would reach its peak and break within two weeks.

"Parents should not hesitate to send their children to school with the opening of the term," Dickie said. "Children are less likely to become ill while attending school than when they are at home during vacations."

PROMINENT DOCTOR PASSES AWAY HERE

Death came suddenly on Monday night to Dr. Charles Boxton, well-known physician and dentist at his home on Finger avenue following an attack of acute indigestion. Dr. and Mrs. Boxton has just returned from a visit with friends in San Francisco when he was taken ill and passed away soon afterwards.

Dr. Boxton was one of the best known professional men of San Francisco, and was the founder of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in that city, and for a number of years president of that college. He was also prominent in the politics of the city, having served for a time as supervisor. He was a veteran of the Spanish-American war, having attained the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in that campaign.

Dr. Boxton is survived by his widow, Mrs. Anna H. Boxton, a daughter, Mrs. Muriel Bellini, now in Italy, and a brother and sister, George Boxton and Mrs. John Casey.

Funeral services were held in San Francisco Thursday for the family's San Francisco residence. Interment was in the Presidio cemetery.

Santa Ana—Best farmers of Orange county harvesting 85,000-ton sugar beet crop.
Santa Maria—$250,000 theater to be built.

according to health department records.

"Many epidemics have ceased with the opening of school," the health expert declared.

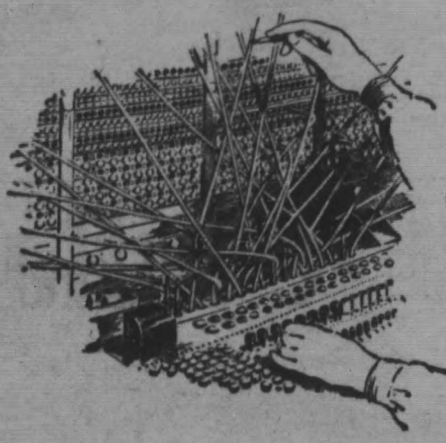

The following points of health progress were noted:

Typhoid fever death rate for the year just ended dropped to 2.8 per 100,000 inhabitants, as compared to a rate of 32 for the same group in 1906.

Malaria is practically eliminated.

Tuberculosis is greatly reduced, and practically all cases are under medical care with virtually no victims of the disease on the street to spread it.

The Switchboard

AWEB of cords that end in numbered holes. A hand poised ready to answer signals which flash from tiny lamps. A mind, alert for prompt and accurate performance of a vital service. A devotion to duty inspired by a sense of the public's reliance on that service.

Every section of a telephone switchboard typifies the co-ordination of human effort and mechanism that makes possible America's far-reaching telephone service. Its cords link for instant speech those who are separated by a continent. Its guardian operator is one of an army of telephone men and women vigilant to meet a nation's need for communications.

In plant and personnel, the Bell System is in effect a vast switchboard serving a nation that has been transformed into a neighborhood through telephone growth and development.
